

Matt LaVigna

President & CEO

National Cyber-Forensics & Training Alliance (NCFTA) | Pittsburgh PA

Matt is the President and CEO of the National Cyber-Forensics & Training Alliance (NCFTA), a nonprofit organization founded in Pittsburgh, PA in 2002 to support and enable the sharing of cyber threat information between private industry and government partners. With offices in Pittsburgh, New York, and Los Angeles, the NCFTA serves as a global model for cross-sector industry and law enforcement collaboration to identify, mitigate, and disrupt some of the most impactful cyber-based threats.

Prior to joining the NCFTA management team in March 2015, Matt spent over 26 years in the United States Secret Service where he led criminal investigations in Pittsburgh, New York City, and at Secret Service Headquarters in Washington, DC. In Washington, he also held several high profile positions to include the Presidential Protection Detail, Investigative Fellow for the United States Senate, and was an original staff member during the foundation of the Department of Homeland Security.
